Holland Coffee, born on August 15, 1807,² to Ambrose and Mildred (Moore) Coffee, was descended from Edward and Ann (Powell) Coffee who lived in Essex County, Virginia, in the early eighteenth century.³ A grandson of Edward, Ambrose Coffee left Virginia with relatives and friends to live for a time in the western counties of North Carolina. Notable in this group besides the Coffees were the Moores and the Hayes—John Coffee (Jack) Hays, the noted Texas Ranger captain, was a relative of the Coffees. It cannot be proven that in moving west Ambrose lived in Warren County, Tennessee, but since several of his children were ²Jesse Coffee (brother) Family Bible.

³Among the five children mentioned in Edward's will, probated in 1716, was John who married Jane Graves. James, one of the nine children born of that union, took as his wife Elizabeth Cleveland, a daughter of Alexander Cleveland, whose relative (brother or uncle) married Martha Coffee, a sister of John Coffee. John and Martha (Coffee) Cleveland were the parents of Colonel Benjamin Cleveland, thus making Colonel Cleveland doubly related to Ambrose, son of James and Elizabeth and father of Holland Coffee. Holland's mother was a daughter of Jesse Moore of Virginia and North Carolina.

Of the nine children of Ambrose and Mildred, two besides Holland are known to have lived in Texas. After residing for a time in Hinds County, Mississippi, Thomas Jefferson Coffee, who married Malinda Graves Williams Haley, came to Brazoria County, Texas, where he operated a large plantation until his death in 1858. America, a sister of Holland and Thomas J., married Samuel Lusk of Buncombe County, North Carolina, and Warren County, Tennessee. The Lusks moved first to Alabama and then to Texas, where they settled in Austin's colony as early as 1835. Descendants of that family still live in Washington County.

Elizabeth Coffee, another sister of Holland, married George Washington Jewell, who built and operated the Indian Queen Hotel in McMinnville, Tennessee. Jewell raised a company and came to Texas to assist in the war against Mexico in 1836, but arrived after the battle of San Jacinto. Elizabeth died in Warren County in 1843, and her husband died in North Texas in 1848. Apparently brought to Texas by her father, Mary Elizabeth Jewell made her home with Holland and Sophia Coffee and continued in the household after Sophia's marriage to Major George N. Butt.

Also the Ambrose Coffee family had at least one cousin in Texas. Mrs. Thomas J. Rusk was the former Mary (Polly) Cleveland, a granddaughter of "Mad" John Cleveland, son of Colonel Ben and Mary (Graves) Cleveland. Although they were not in Texas, other cousins of prominence were Mrs. C. J. McDonald, wife of a governor of Georgia, and Jesse Franklin, who fought through the North Carolina campaigns with his uncle, Colonel Ben Cleveland, then served in various lesser civil offices before he was elected governor of the state in 1820.

Genealogical data on the Coffee family collected by Don Ruth Coffee Merritt, Dallas, Texas; Lyman C. Draper, Kings Mountain and Its Heroes (Cincinnati, 1881), 425; Northern Standard (Clarksville), June 24, 1848; Lyon G. there,⁴ it seems that the McMinnville vicinity may have been home, at least briefly, for the restless pioneer. After Ambrose's death in 1818, Holland and Christopher Greenup, only surviving child of Ambrose's second marriage in 1812, probably went to McMinnville to live.

In traveling to the Arkansas-Texas area over a decade later Holland Coffee was associated with a group of Warren County residents,⁵ a fact which indicates that he began his migration to Texas from that section rather than from Wayne and Pulaski counties in Kentucky where his father lived the last several years of his life. The exact date of the party's departure from Tennessee is not recorded. But George Strother Gaines, who in the fall of 1830 led a small company of Choctaws to the Indian Territory to choose lands for the relocation of the tribe west of the Mississippi, reported that while in camp on the south bank of the Arkansas River near Fort Smith, Arkansas, he purchased supplies from Coffee and Colville, traders.⁶ In 1833, at the head of a party of forty trappers, Coffee explored trade possibilities to the southwest and in rapid succession set up posts, the first of which was in present-day Tillman County, Oklahoma, while the other two were to the east near Red River in what are presently Love and Cotton counties.⁷

Another report on Holland Coffee in the Red River area came from James Bowie, who wrote:

Natches August 3rd, 1835

Mr. Henry Rueg
Jefe Politico of Nacodoches District

Sir I have made my tour through the Indian villages and make this my report. The Shawnees were all in a drunken frolick which I learned before reaching them and did not call on them, I then

⁴Both America and Elizabeth Coffee were in Warren County, Tennessee. Myra, their sister, married William Edmondson and lived there until her death in 1835. Jesse Coffee, oldest of the children of Ambrose and Mildred, married Ann Hackett, and in 1825 built what is presently known as the Black home at 801 West Main Street, McMinnville, Tennessee. Ben F. Strickland

Dear Mr. Strickland,

We're awfully sorry about the delay in answering your letter, but here at the Library and Archives we are currently faced with a three month backlog of requests, and we try to handle them in the order in which they were received.

In answer to your request, our records are listed by name rather than regiment, and our muster rolls are divided by regiment and name of the commanding Colonel. There was no indication of a Colonel Jewell, and if he was a Captain (Since you didn't specify, we assume he might have been), there is no way to find his company without going through hundreds of muster rolls. Also, a check of our name index failed to turn up any Jewell at all.

Our advice would be to write the National Archives in Washington, and even if they don't have the muster roll itself, perhaps they can tell you more about "Jewell's Men", and in turn that will help us find your muster roll.

Sincerely,

Jim Webb
